The Ecological Crisis is a Political Crisis With each passing day, reports on global climate change become increasingly bleak. Recent research has affirmed that the glaciers are melting faster than anticipated 1, and that acidification, with its catastrophic effect on ocean ecosystems, is also proceeding faster than feared 2.

Plumwood provides a provocative diagnosis of the cultural illusions that fuel the contemporary environmental crisis. Environmental culture demonstrates how an anthropocentric logic of human self-enclosure has been masquerading as rationality, and how this perverted rationality has captured many spheres of culture.
